Un, negative particle used as prefix (in comp. with subst.'s, adj.'s, adv.'s and past participles =) un-, in-, im-, dis-, ir-, not-, non-. The principal meanings of un- are: (1) absolute negation; e.g. Unlust, untwist; (2) a bad sort of; e.g. Unmenschen, Untier; (3) excessive amount;

e.g. Unmenge, Unsumme. Only the most important of the numberless comp'ds with un- can be given here. The meaning of others will be obvious when un-, in-, or not are prefixed to the equivalent of the second part of the compound. If the second word is a participle, see the verb to which it belongs. In case it is a derivative in -bar, -lich or -sam look out the verb from which it is derived. The accentuation of the comp'ds with un- is in some cases doubtful; the usual one has been indicated. As a rule it may be noted that in the case of comp'ds with nouns (Un'fuss) and adjectives (un'förmig) the principal accent is on the prefix un-, especially if the word without un- is of frequent occurrence. In other cases it is possible to place the accent so as to emphasize either the negation or the second part of the compound. Note the (slight) glottal stop in those compounds in which the second part begins with a vowel; e.g., unabhängig, unabhängig.

INDEX OF NAMES.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND PROPER NAMES.

In the subjoined list of Geographical and Proper Names the following classes of words have, as a rule, been omitted:—

1. Those in which the German and English forms correspond exactly: e.g. Wifred, Alfred; Richard, Richard; Sonbon, London; Samburg, Hamburg, etc., etc.

2. Those names of countries in which the German terminations -ien, -ifa, correspond to the English -ia, -ica: e.g. Wien, Asia; Indien, India; Skandinavia, Scandinavia, etc., etc.

It should also be noticed that where the difference between the English and German forms is very slight, the names usually occur in the English-German part only. Names of rivers which are the same in both languages appear in the English-German part, where the German gender is shown.
